Creating Contemporary Illuminated Choir Pages Inspired by the Renaissance

Grade level: 6-8

Background:
During the Renaissance, when Luca della Robbia’s Cantoria would have hung in Florence Cathedral, intricate hand-made illuminated choir books were featured inside of churches. The pages from the choir books featured hand-painted, highly detailed images that reflected the content of the songs, and they were referred to as “illuminated” because they were embellished with gold and silver. In this lesson, students will learn about the history of illuminated manuscripts, and will create their own illuminated choir book page inspired by a song of their choice.

Essential Questions:
1. How were illuminated manuscripts relevant as an artistic form during the Renaissance?
2. How can I incorporate the art historical tradition of illuminated manuscripts to be relevant to my contemporary life?

Objective:
Students will create a well-crafted illuminated choir book page on 11x14 art board in which they illustrate the lyrics to a song of their choice.

Terms:
- Illuminated manuscript (The word manuscript is derived from the Latin words manus (hand) and scriptus, from the verb scriber (to write). The word illumination comes from the Latin verb illuminare (to light up), which, in this context, describes the glow created by the radiant colors of the illustrations, especially gold and silver.

Materials:
- Sketchbook
- Pencils
- 11x14 art board
- Lyrics to a song (printed out or written)
- Glue
- Collage materials
Colored pencils, paint, or markers
Silver and gold puff paint (or paint pens)

Lesson:
Day 1-2:
• Introduce the students to images of illuminated choir books, and have them investigate them visually. (There is one featured in the Joyful Noise exhibition you may want to have them see at the museum, Francesco di Antonio del Chierico (Italian, 1433-1484)
• Take time to discuss the history of illuminated manuscripts. (There are several links to historical resource sites provided).
• Ask the students to think about a song that they like, and have them bring in the lyrics to that song for the next class meeting (printed or written).

Day 3-4:
• The students will be creating their own illuminated choir book pages for the song lyrics that they chose.
• First, the students will take a few minutes to think about their lyrics, and use their sketchbook to brainstorm imagery that they think illustrates their songs.
• When the students are ready to make their page, they can glue their lyrics onto their board and proceed to design their borders. (They may want to draw, paint, or collage).
• When the designs are finished, the students can use silver or gold puff paint or paint pens to “illuminate” their pages.

Assessment:
Formative assessment will occur through classroom discussion and verbal feedback during studio time. Summative assessment can be recorded by rubric that can be adjusted according to teacher discretion.

Since this lesson is heavily centered on art history, you may want to include a quiz with questions about the history of illuminated manuscripts.

Modifications/Extensions:
To delve deeper into the project, you could have the students write a critical thinking response in their sketchbooks after they finish their project. Some questions to consider might be: “Why do you think your song is worthy of being illuminated?” “Does your song reflect you as an individual? If so, how?” “Explain how your visual illustrations relate to the song you chose.” “Compare and contrast the illuminated manuscripts that our class made to those in the Renaissance. How does time period affect the art we make?”

Another way to integrate a writing element into this lesson would be to have the students write their own poems to make into an illuminated manuscript rather than having them choose a song. While the incorporation of a song reflects the importance of music in this particular topic, there are other ways in which music could be emphasized.
