THIRD CLASS OF THE ANDREW W. MELLON UNDERGRADUATE CURATORIAL FELLOWS ANNOUNCED BY FIVE MAJOR AMERICAN MUSEUMS

(ATLANTA—Nov. 29, 2016) The Art Institute of Chicago, the High Museum of Art, the Los Angeles County Museum of Art (LACMA), the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston (MFAH), and The Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art are pleased to announce a third class of fellows designated for The Andrew W. Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellowship Program awarded through a recent grant of $465,000. The fellowship provides specialized training in the curatorial field to students across the United States who exemplify historically underrepresented minorities and other undergraduates who are committed to promoting inclusive, pluralistic museums. The students begin their fellowships this fall.

Fellows will participate in The Andrew W. Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellowship Program during their undergraduate career, with the goal of continuing their education through graduate work. The two-year fellowship provides students with hands-on experience in a museum setting, assisting curators and staff on exhibitions, collections, and programs. Fellows are matched with a museum curatorial mentor who works to enrich the academic experience and to increase exposure to the museum context while broadening a fellow's understanding of art and art history. Fellowships include regular engagement during the academic school year followed by full-time engagement over the summer.

The Andrew W. Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellowship Program is supported by a five-year pilot phase (2013–18) grant from The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. More information about the need for a diverse educational pipeline into the curatorial field is available in the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation Art Museum Staff Demographic Survey published in July 2015.

“Fostering diversity in the next curatorial generation is crucial to shaping a future for our museums, a future in which museums continue to be both inspirational and relevant,” said James Rondeau, President and Eloise W. Martin Director at the Art Institute of Chicago. “Our bright and dynamic cadre of new and current Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellows brings fresh perspectives, questions, and voices to the experience and interpretation of art for our global audiences.”

“It is an immense pleasure to work with these talented, driven students” said Rand Suffolk, Nancy and Holcombe T. Green, Jr. Director of the High Museum of Art. “We’re honored to continue this important program, which fosters a more diverse, inclusive foundation of leadership for the future of the field.”

“LACMA is thrilled to welcome the third class of fellows to the program,” said Michael Govan, LACMA CEO and Wallis Annenberg Director. “We are committed to telling stories that reflect all cultures and worldviews, and we are excited to train the next generation of curators who will inspire audiences of all backgrounds.”

“The contributions of the first two classes of Mellon fellows have already had an impact on programs and exhibitions here—conducting tours, translating texts in the permanent collection, and supporting the registrars and curators in the essential groundwork of exhibition planning,” commented Gary Tinterow, director of the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston. “We look forward to welcoming these two new students as we continue to bolster opportunities in the museum field for these future professionals.”

“We are honored to participate in The Andrew W. Mellon Undergraduate Curatorial Fellowship and grateful for the opportunity to provide students with meaningful experiences in a great institution like the Nelson-Atkins,” said Julián Zugazagoitia, CEO and Director of The Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art. “These fellows and this program have been a breath of fresh air for the institutions. As much as we see the participants grow, our museum has also benefited from having a new vantage point to view the curatorial profession. This initiative is critical in educating, mentoring, and supporting a diverse group of young scholars who truly will become our future curatorial leaders.”

ANDREW W. MELLON UNDERGRADUATE CURATORIAL FELLOWS

Art Institute Chicago

Margarita Lizcano is a third-year student in the Art History, Theory, and Criticism program at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. Her focus is on Latin American Modern and Contemporary Art with an interest in Helio Oiticica, Lygia Clark and Guillermo Gomez-Peña. Having been born in Chihuahua, Chihuahua, Mexico, Margarita is also interested in the hybridity of both physical borders, such as the Mexico/US border, and metaphorical borders, dealing with issues of classism and colorism. This academic year Michal Raz Russo, Assistant Curator of Photography, will mentor Margarita.

Alejandra Vargas studies Art History, Theory, and Criticism at the School of the Art Institute. Before attending SAIC, Alejandra was a two-year intern/participant at the Museum of Contemporary Art Chicago. During her time at the MCA, she and her peers, together called the Teen Creative Agency, challenged what the institution could be and do for minority youth. Alejandra is excited about exploring the ways our cultural institutions give back to underrepresented communities. She questions what the responsibility of a modern-day curator should be, and asks: how can an institution speak for its community, if parts of that community are not represented? This academic year Leslie Fitzpatrick, Assistant Curator of European Decorative Arts, will mentor Alejandra.
Kéla Jackson is an art history major and African diaspora studies minor at Spelman College. During her first year at Spelman College, she volunteered as a museum ambassador for the school’s museum and was chosen to participate in the inaugural class of curatorial fellows. The summer after her freshman year was spent interning at the Harn Museum of Art at the University of Florida, where she was able to work on projects with the curators of African, Asian and contemporary art. As an aspiring curator, Jackson hopes to push for inclusivity in the art world by incorporating works that were once overlooked, in order to reach people outside of the art elite. Her curatorial mentor is Katherine Jentleson, the High’s Merrie and Dan Boone curator of folk and self-taught art.

Carson Keith is a student of the Honors College and the Ernest G. Welch School of Art and Design at Georgia State University (GSU), where she is pursuing a Bachelor of Fine Arts in Textiles with a minor in Art History. She is an apprentice at Sea Island Indigo Farm and exhibits regularly in local Atlanta shows. Keith is the archivist and treasurer in the GSU Textiles Artisans Guild and is interested in facilitating communication between young women in fine arts via interdisciplinary shows. She hopes that her study in textile works and their histories will help to inform her study under Sarah Schleuning, the High’s curator of decorative arts and design.

Lauren Churchwell is a rising junior pursuing a double major in art history and anthropology at Pitzer College. Born and raised in Nashville, Tennessee, her love of art began when she was a young child through her fascination with the Ancient World; this interest and her desire to promote accessibility and visibility in art museums form the basis for her work. During her time at Pitzer she has also been involved with the on-campus philanthropic club Tutors for A Cause where she serves as co-president. Megan O’Neil, associate curator in the Art of the Ancient Americas, will be her curatorial mentor.

Hope Flores is an art history and studio art major at East Los Angeles College. In 2015, Hope was selected for the Getty Multicultural Undergraduate Internship (MUI) program, and interned at Self Help Graphics and Art. She went on to work at LA Plaza de Cultura y Artes and the Vincent Price Art Museum while attending school and was a curatorial intern at the Museum of Latin American Art. Hope recently co-organized Crossed Pollinations: Investigating Nature and Culture in China, an event featuring an exhibition at the Alhambra Civic Center Library. In conjunction with the exhibition, Hope facilitated an artists’ panel discussion which investigated the affinity many artists feel with floral life, a theme Hope explores in her own studio practice. She hopes to bring attention to social and environmental issues through her curatorial practice, and is interested in exploring visual similarities in art across cultures. Hope’s curatorial mentor is Carol Eliel, curator of Modern Art.

Amarie Gipson attends St. Edward's University in Austin, Texas and is majoring in Liberal Studies with a concentration in art, art history, and philosophy. She is an independent curator and interns at Pump Project Art Complex, a nonprofit art space in East Austin that provides studios and gallery facilities to emerging and established artists. There, she recently curated Femme National(e), a multimedia group exhibition of contemporary women artists. She served as a research assistant for Dr. Amy Nathan Wright's American Dilemma's course, investigating issues such as race, gender, and class. As a Mellon Fellow, Amarie seeks to continue pursuing her passion for African American contemporary art while further developing her practice as a curator and scholar. Amarie's curatorial mentor will be Dena Woodall, associate curator of prints and drawings.

Celia Shaheen attends the University of Texas at Austin and is double majoring in art history and studio art with an interdisciplinary concentration in museum studies. As a fellow, Celia is excited to continue pursuing her interests in museum collections, archives, and curatorial practice, with emphasis on exhibiting the work of a more diversified body of artists in museums. Celia has contributed to the work and mission of collections and art galleries on campus at the University of Texas at Austin: she served as a junior curatorial officer for the Center Space Project, a student run organization at the Visual Art Center; she was a preservation guild intern for the Landmarks' public art program on campus; and she is a senior student assistant at the Harry Ransom Center for the Gabriel García Márquez online archive. Celia's practice as a studio art student focuses on photography and printmaking, and she is interested in bridging her studio practice and curatorial research as a fellow at the MFAH. Celia's curatorial mentor is Malcolm Daniel, Gus and Lyndall Wortham Curator, Department of Photography.

Hayk Badalyan is a Regents Scholar at the University of California, Los Angeles and is pursuing a double major in Art History and Business Economics. His interest in art developed at a young age from his travels to museums across the world and has since grown from a hobby to a passion. Hayk works as a Student Educator at the Hammer Museum in Santa Monica, California where his interaction with artists, curators, and visitors of all backgrounds has fueled his love for museum work. Hayk Badalyan is mentored by Gaylord Torrence, Fred and Virginia Merrill Senior Curator of American Indian Art.

Kathryn Cua is a student at the University of Missouri who studies art history and journalism. Kat has always loved art, but her interest in art history came serendipitously during her senior year of high school. Needing one more humanities class to fulfill graduation requirements, she took AP art history at the recommendation of a friend. She’s been in love with it ever since. Her interest in curating came in a similar way—Kat looked up careers in art history to find a reason to take it on as another major. This has led her to incomparable opportunities such as participating as a research assistant in the I-70 Sign Show in Columbia, Missouri, and participating in the 2016 Andrew W. Mellon Summer Academy at the Nelson-Atkins. Kathryn will be mentored by Catherine Futter, Director, Curatorial Affairs and Aimee Marcereau DeGalan, The Louis L. and Adelaide C. Ward Senior Curator of European Arts.
