HIGH MUSEUM OF ART TO PRESENT FIRST RETROSPECTIVE OF SOUTHERN ARTIST RONALD LOCKETT

ATLANTA, June 16, 2016 – The High Museum of Art will present the groundbreaking retrospective “Fever Within: The Art of Ronald Lockett,” the first comprehensive exhibition of work by the passionately inspired and little-understood figure whose work challenges the boundaries between self-taught and mainstream contemporary American artists.

On view Oct. 9, 2016, through Jan. 8, 2017, the exhibition will explore the full range of Lockett’s innovative and evocative paintings, sculptures and assemblages, offering in-depth insight into his process and the creative impulses that propelled him. Largely unrecognized during his lifetime, Lockett (American, 1965–1998) had by the time of his death at age 32 produced an estimated 400 artworks that embody a stunning evolution of artistic practice.

“The High has made an institutional commitment to collecting, exhibiting and championing the work of Southern self-taught artists, and our desire is to foster recognition of these artists in the larger history of American art,” said Rand Suffolk, Nancy and Holcombe T. Green, Jr., director of the High. “We are honored to present this important exhibition, which gives much-deserved attention to Lockett’s powerful voice and significance as a contemporary artist.”

“I am proud to bring this show to the High, especially after our recent engagement with Jean-Michel Basquiat. Here is another artist whose talent and vision burned so brightly only to disappear long before his time,” said Katherine Jentleson, Merrie and Dan Boone curator of folk and self-taught art. “In Lockett, our audiences will discover an artist whose body of work is both beautiful and bleak, challenging and inspiring, elevated yet down to earth.”

Raised in Bessemer, Ala., Lockett was heavily influenced by other self-taught African American artists in his close-knit community, including his cousin Thornton Dial (American, 1928–2016), who mentored and encouraged him. At the High, “Fever Within” will feature an exclusive installation of large-scale sculpture by Lockett and his contemporaries, linking him to those artists who emerged from the African American steel communities of Birmingham and Bessemer, Alabama, over the past 30 years.

Participating in the tradition of painting and sculpture that emerged among his self-taught peers, Lockett drew upon found materials, such as metal from abandoned buildings and fences, as well as a symbolic cast of animal avatars to address themes of struggle, survival and injustice in contexts that ranged from the autobiographical to the national. He explored events in 20th-century history that he sought to understand better, including acts of large-scale violence and terrorism like the Holocaust and the bombings of Hiroshima and the Oklahoma City Federal Building. He also grappled with subjects such as racial and political tumult, including the rise of the Ku Klux Klan and the unfulfilled promises of the civil rights movement, environmental degradation and religious faith. In his final years, following his diagnosis with HIV/AIDS, Lockett explored themes of mortality, salvation and remembrance. This exhibition will feature more than 50 works, including several from the High’s collection, that emphasize the powerful subjects the artist explored over the course of his career.

“Fever Within” is organized by the Ackland Art Museum at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and is curated by Bernard L. Herman, UNC-Chapel Hill’s George B. Tindall distinguished professor of Southern studies and folklore, in close collaboration with the Souls Grown Deep Foundation, an Atlanta-based organization dedicated to documenting, researching, preserving and exhibiting the work of vernacular African American artists of the American South.

Prior to its presentation at the High, the exhibition will be on view at the American Folk Art Museum in New York (June 21–Sept. 18, 2016) and will culminate at the Ackland Art Museum (Jan. 27–April 9, 2017).

“Fever Within: The Art of Ronald Lockett” Publication
The exhibition is accompanied by a scholarly publication, edited by Bernard L. Herman and published by the University of North Carolina Press. The book includes 60 full-color plates of Lockett’s paintings and assemblages as well as written contributions by Herman, Jentleson, Paul Arnett (Souls Grown Deep Foundation), Sharon Patricia Holland (Duke University), Thomas J. Lax (The Museum of Modern Art) and Colin Rhodes (University of Melbourne).

Exhibition Organization and Support
“Fever Within: The Art of Ronald Lockett” is organized by the Ackland Art Museum, The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The exhibition has been made possible in part by awards from the William R. Kenan, Jr., Charitable Trust and the National Endowment for the Arts. Additional funding has been provided by the Department of American Studies Chair’s Discretionary Fund for Southern Studies at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

About the High Museum of Art Folk and Self-Taught Art Department
The High Museum of Art is dedicated to supporting and collecting works by Southern artists and is distinguished as the first encyclopedic art museum in North America to have a full-time curator devoted to folk and self-taught art.
